CONCLUSIONS

During Q1 2026, we consolidated a strong and stable performance across all key metrics, maintaining consistent reach levels while significantly improving engagement rates.

One of the most notable highlights is the sustained high ER (5%) in January and February, followed by a slight normalization in March (4%). This indicates that content quality and audience connection remained strong, even as volume and reach stabilized.

In terms of reach, we observed a balanced distribution between organic and influencer-driven performance. While January started with moderate total reach, February and March maintained similar levels, showing consistency without relying on spikes or one-off activations.

Organic reach remained particularly solid throughout the quarter, reinforcing the effectiveness of the content strategy in generating repeat views and deeper audience interaction.

On the influencer side, performance stabilized after the fluctuations seen in previous months. This suggests that the current squad is delivering more predictable and sustained results, rather than depending on isolated peaks.

Overall, Q1 reflects a shift from growth volatility to performance maturity: stable reach, high engagement, and a healthier balance between organic content and influencer amplification.
